Literacy Blooms! Mill Neck Manor Welcomes Back Spring Book Fair

On Sunday, May 18, historic Mill Neck Manor House will once again be the storybook setting for a wonderful family-friendly book fair, “Literacy Blooms.” This is the second year for the community event hosted by the Mill Neck Family of Organizations and the Long Island Authors Group (LIAG). The book fair is open to all and is free! From 12 to 4 pm, a wide variety of children’s, young adult and adult authors will be on hand, featuring genres ranging from memoir to mystery, poetry to picture books.

Founded in 2008, LIAG encourages and supports local writers through promotional efforts and workshops. In addition, the not-for-profit organization frequently hosts events like the upcoming book fair at Mill Neck. To date, 14 LIAG authors will be participating at “Literacy Blooms,” including LIAG founder John P. Cardone, children’s authors Sandy Lanton and Natasha Guruleva, adult fiction writer Ron Scott and nonfiction author Russell Moran, among them.

A number of additional authors are scheduled to appear as well. Author Edward Mirabella will share his experience as a hearing child born to a Deaf mother, recounted in his memoir, L’Only Child. Trisha Malfitano will be joining us, offering a different experience with deafness. Malfitano, a children’s author, will be accompanied by her dog Kiefer, who is deaf. She and Kiefer recently visited the library at Mill Neck’s Deaf Education Center, where she read her books to the students.

Rounding the out the afternoon will be a craft session for children, storytime, special character appearances and a selection of raffles. And maybe a surprise or two!

The Mill Neck Family welcomes this cultural and creative event, which supports The Literacy Collaborative, one of the academic programs at the Mill Neck Manor School for the Deaf. The Literacy Collaborative helps students acquire the literacy skills crucial to their schooling and futures. As a result of the program’s collaboration between intensive in-class instruction and consistent parental involvement, Mill Neck students have shown remarkable progress toward achieving the same level of literacy as their hearing peers.

Book lovers of all ages are encouraged to attend this delightful event! Experience the beauty of the Manor and find some great reads, knowing your support is benefitting the next generation of readers and writers.
